Richard Birbeck came back last week from a six months' trip through Texas and other southern states. He saw lots of fine country, he says, and experienced all sorts of times, but is satisfied that Barton and Stafford county farmers are as well off, if not better, than the agriculturist of any other part of the country.

The window dressing at the New York store is a work of art. The holiday display not only shows the goods to the best possible advantage, but portrays an eye to the artistic even to the most minute detail. Henry Born's work in window dressing would not suffer by comparison with that of the best stores in the large cities.

The 6-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Cooney Hartman, living three miles south of this city, died on Tuesday. A short time ago he ran against a post and received a bad cut in the face. The wound was stitched up and no bad results were apprehended until on Monday, when he was taken with spasms, followed by lockjaw, and after great suffering death followed. The funeral took place yesterday. This sad affair has cast a gloom over the entire community, and the heartfelt sympathy of all goes out to the sorrowing family.

There seems to be considerable kicking over the action of the school board last week in adopting the Crane series of readers, and arguments pro and con are heard on every corner. Some claim that the new books are inferior to the old in that they do not contain as much matter; that the engravings are "stock" cuts and the binding very poor. Friends of the other book claim it to be a much better book for the money than the Barnes' reader; that it has the endorsement of the state superintendent and prominent educators everywhere, and that it is a Kansas production. It is argued that in almost every family the old readers are laid away for young hopefuls not yet of proper age to use them, and that these books will be a total loss to their owners, as only books in actual use can be exchanged. The columns of this paper are open for the discussion of the question, and what we said last week was prompted solely by the unanimity with which the board of education favored the Crane reader.
